From Mountaintops to Grassroots: An Interfaith Call to Action

Green Building Workshops in Oregon
Oregon IPL (OIP) led workshops on Green Building and Renovation as part of its educational programs and consulting services to houses of worship across the state. Congregations learned how to incorporate energy efficiency at every level, from using recycled construction materials to energy-efficient lighting and insulation, to investing in renewable energy such as solar power. OIP offers 20-50% discounts on consulting services to member congregations, helping them to become better stewards of the Earth’s resources, as well as their finances.

Clean Energy in Maine
Maine IPL (MiIPL) is the only affiliate in the IPL network that sells zero-emission renewable energy directly to the public. MiIPL clean energy products come from wind, as well as Maine’s only low-impact hydropower dam on the Androscoggin River. Using funds from product revenues, in 2006 MiIPL contributed $8,000 to the Downeast Solar Co-op to help make solar installations more affordable for Maine residents.

Spotlight on Global Warming
In October 2006, over 4,000 congregations hosted screenings of An Inconvenient Truth and other documentaries to reach out to people of faith about the threat of global warming. An estimated 500,000 congregants, from churches, mosques, synagogues, and halls of worship in all 50 states, took part in the Spotlight on Global Warming Campaign to learn about and discuss the moral imperative of climate change.

Reducing Power Plant Emissions in Illinois
In May, Illinois IPL members supported Gov. Blagojevich’s proposed mercury rule for Illinois, requiring coal-fired power plants to slash emissions of mercury, sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide. The rule mandates a near-90% reduction in mercury discharges by 2009, making it the toughest measure in the country. The law passed in December 2006.

Switching to Energy-Saving Lightbulbs in Georgia
In November, Georgia IPL organized an event to replace 3,500 regular light bulbs with 3,500 energy-saving light bulbs in 3.5 hours at a large affordable housing complex in Atlanta. Projected savings estimate a reduction of almost 1,600 tons of carbon dioxide from the atmosphere and savings of $135,000 in utility bills and replacement costs.

Capping Greenhouse Gases in California
In June 2006, California IPL organized support from more than 100 religious leaders for a mandatory cap on greenhouse gas emissions in California. Rev. Sally Bingham is shown here standing behind Gov. Schwarzenegger as he signs an executive order supporting the cap.

New IPL: Alaska
In the fall of 2006, Alaska IPL became the 20th state program. Studies confirm that climate change is affecting the northernmost parts of the globe more rapidly than others. Given the potential threat to the people, plants, and animals of Alaska, the moral responsibility to protect God’s Creation is nowhere greater than here.

A Note from The Regeneration Project’s President
Dear Friends and Supporters,

This has been a banner year for The Regeneration Project. Our message is reaching thousands of people all over the country, and global warming is now seen as a moral issue—one that people of faith can willingly take a leadership role in addressing. The subject no longer belongs exclusively to the environmental community, but rather has landed profoundly in the moral issue—one that people of faith concern themselves with.

The Spotlight on Global Warming event gave us an enormous boost, and three more state programs have come on board since October 2006. In just this past year our budget has doubled, and we now have seven employees under our wing, with the result that we are outgrowing our beautiful space in the Presidio of San Francisco. We have come a long way since 1997, when we first started this movement in a small home office. But the expansion is welcome, and affirms that we are successfully deepening the connection between ecology and faith.

—The Rev. Sally Bingham
